Participles/Participial Phrases

1. In your own words, explain how this technique works:

Verb or phrase ending in "-ing" or "-ed" and placed at the beginning of a sentence

2. Example: "The diamond – scaled snake attacked their prey"

Better: "Hissing and Slithering, the diamond – scaled snakes attacked their prey."

3. In these two examples, highlight the participles and/or participial phrases:

"Now he was on the bridge, hunched over on the bicycle, pedaling steadily." – Lois Lowry, The Giver

"The shirt was silk paisley, unbuttoned halfway down his hairless chest." – Rick Riordan, The Lightning Thief

I found it interesting that the tone of the poem is presented in anger. The person is sharing how they feel when someone asks them that certain question which they think is obvious.

I like how the mother i guess in this poem chose to teach her child her tongue/ language how she wants to and not how the outside world kept telling her to, also as a personal opinion i feel as if the author of this poem gave out an annoyed tone while writing as if they were just fed up with everything.

[redacted] AM

I liked the poem, it was interesting and engaging. I could connect to it and liked how the writer used her emotion because I know she could connect to it as well

I thought that the using langue as a wepon and how english was a bullet shot and being shot was a very good represntation of how langue is a big part of culture.

[redacted] AM

i like how the writer connected personally and used emotion.

i like that culture and religion makes you powerful and it helps show who you are

[redacted] AM

I like how the poem is based on the authors personal connection.

I really like these opening questions. They do a good job of referring to the context that we are in while we listen to Limetown.

Why do you think Max's wife said everything Max said to Lea was bs? I thought this was a good question because for being his wife I thought she might have supported him and whatever he said but turns out she didn't really so I personally found it weird and sus 😬

Why did Max bring his wife along with him to Lime town if he knew it could be harmful? Did Max really love her? If Max really loved this wife he would not want to put her in risks because of him. Would Max bring his wife because he was to afraid to go on his own? This shows that Max knew it was harmful but still brought her. This question is important because, it shows the reader if Max really loved his

1. I chose this image because it showcased a clear and strong message. Many people seem to overlook the struggles that Aboriginal people have faced because they believe that it's a "relic of the past" not something they are experiencing the present. Yet, when faced with the reality of the situation and the anger of the people, government officials choose to play down the severity of these issues in an attempt to save face. As these types of protests are becoming more common and the community is choosing to speak out against

Hey Keerat, thanks for sharing.

I agree with you on how the Canadian government officials did not effectively take any action towards reconciliation. While saying they will take steps forward and have a plan, nothing really happened. Although, it was a heartfelt apology, i feel like a lot more should have been done for the indigenous people. They offered and forced many handshakes which have been "out of the box" but not

Hey Keerat! Thanks for sharing your thoughts.

You make an interesting point about our former PM's attempt to apologize to the first nations people. I agree that his apology was in fact just to suppress the problem, rather than solving it.

Keerat Joshi Thank you for sharing, you make some strong points. You might want to think about why the government has not yet executed an acceptable plan for reconciliation, we definitely have the means? What might be holding the political players back?
